A TRIBUTE OF AFFECTION TO THE MEMORY OF THE DEAD.

BY KLIZABETH JUSSLY KAMES. Engraven on the hearts of these who knew.

Nor yet knew half her warth—
"Till she was gone.

Do they not miss thee is that home where thou didst hold thy way,

When yet with health and vigor blest, thy footsteps day by day,

With care and kindness, moved among thy happy household
haode—
Having for all a courteous word; for all an open hand?
Alas! alas! regrets, and tears, are given for thee in vain—
They cannot bring thee back to tread thy daily paths again;

Do they not miss thee reund that home, is lawn and grape-vine hower?

Amid the pleasant garden walks, by tree and opening flower.

For thou wert one that loved to watch each little bud unfold: And every tender, trembling plant with sheiding care up-bold:

And thou didst teach the creeper where its clust ring leave

Do they not miss thee in the scene that marked thy later life Where thou didst pass the langering hours with weary sick ness rife?

Ay, every thing around the spot proclaims that thou art gone.

And O, no fl. wer at even tide closed with a calm so deep.

As that which soft and alleudy luffer thee to dreamless sieep.

So gently did the Sparit pass that they who watched thy breath

Scarce knew if on thy pathd brow not set the scal of Deat

And with the assembled multitude thy voice in Wershiphlend? Yes, thou wert ever there to kneel before the Holy Sarine, And lay upon the altar-stone thy offering divine. O' mid those consecrated Courts which long thy footsteps

We never more shall hear thy voice in praise to Father-God.

Then, thou the welcome of a smile across my pathway flung.

And from that hour my heart to thine in grateful leve bath

Do I not miss thee? Let the void within my heart reply.
Of as I glance toward the spot where the dost calmly lie.
And can it be, O samted one? that thy last word is said—
That thy kind heart is lying cold, and still among the dead.
Alas: I faitle thought the harp that won thy partial praise?
Would e'er its funeral tone for thee in mouroful duty raise?
But flow hart won a blistful rest, and 'tis but left for me.
The sear the last and prince to the dead of the last and the last and the last the last and the last the last that the last the last the last that the last To pay this last said tribute to thy cherished memory. May 25, 1842.

From the Boston Miscellany for June.

CATOCHUS.

It was a breathless eight in June. My win-dows were all open, and yet the flame of my can-dle scarcely flickered. I had become deeply inte-rested in the pages of a new book, and was heedless of the lapse of time, or the circumstances around me, until suddenly a moth fluttered into the flame, and the crackling of its filmy wings at the flame, and the cracking of real may wing activacted my attention. Upon glancing at my watch which lay beside me on the table, I found to my surprise that it was already after midnight. I determined thereupon to read no more, and slutting my book, walked necess the room to draw the curtain, intending immediately to go to bed, but the mounlight shone so pleasantly in at the windows. dow, that I was forced to sit down and lean spon the sill, and gaze out upon the scene. There were a few thin, whitish clouds hanging around the hori-zon, like the distant wings of an enermous spirit. Above, the moon was shining peacefully, and be-low, the world of green lay dreaming in its misty shroud, half obscured, save where the curving shroud, half obscured, save where the curving river glancing in the moonlight, showe like a burnished belt of steel. There is a strange fascination in sitting in the moonlight—and for almost an hour I sat leaning out into the air. All was quiet save the monotonous musical gurgle of frogs in the pond, and at intervals the rustling of green leaves as a tremulous breath of wind swelled gently and then died away, or the prolonged bark of seme far-eff dog. That fallen into a vague reverie, when I heard the bell strike the hour of one. I arose and went to bed. But no sooner had I letithe window than I felt a sharp pain shoot through the window than I felt a sharp pain she the window than I felt a sharp pain shoot through my head, which, after recurring at intervals through the next half hour, finally settled into a raging headache. My brain throbbed violently and seemed loose in my head, so that every motion added to the pain. It was as if an iron hand compressed my temples within its griping fingers. I lay thus tossing, restless and sleepless for several hours, and finally fell asleep.

I dreamed that I was lying beside a waterfall, half asleep. The water rushed hissing down beside me as if an ocean were loosened, and hurried, boiling fiercely, down a rocky declivity. The ried, boiling fiercely, down a rocky declivity. The air was drizzled with spray, which fell over me like hot sparks, and the trees above me, seen through it, seemed at times human skeletons. the air and became natural trees again. A thou sand circles intertangling and interlacing, dilated and contracted incessantly, then slowly the motion decreased, and they kept creeping around more and more gently, until they swam into a broad sea of smooth, glassy water, and fading out broad sea of smooth, glassy water, and lading out of my sight, left the air above me all calm and clear. Soon a small eye seemed placidly looking at me that grew larger and larger, until it filled the wide ring of the horizon; then it changed into a face which looked close into my eyes; gradsally the features became distorted into a hideous mask. and grinned, and then a thousand similar faces crowded one upon another, until the air seemed full of them: they were huddled together and tossed about without body like the waves of the tossed about without body like the waves of the ocean. Now I suddenly seemed to be crawling or my hands and knees over slimy and slippery rocks, which were covered with damp green sea-weed. As I groped along, the sea-weed began to change into snakes, until the rocks seemed alive with the nauseous crawling reptiles that rubbed their slimy sides against my limbs and cheeks, and cast over me a dreadful chill of horror;—all my fless seemed to creep, and the very scalp to move on my sgull. In the midst of my horror and torment, I heard the wild ringing of a bell. I suddenly and convulsively opened my eyes and heard the breakfast bell ringing. For a moment I expebreakfast bell ringing. For a moment I experienced the most grateful relief from the torment reaced the most grateful relief from the torment of this nightmare, which has more than once thus affected me—and ne one can tell the glad gush of feeling which came over me, when I found all this horrible scene was leat a dream. I lay thus for a moment, thinking of the change, and then resolved to spring from the bed and dress myself immediately; but what was my surprise and horror, when I found I could not move. My body and limbs seemed rigid as marble and of an intolerable weight. I could neither turn my head, nor stir hand ner fost. My cychalls were fixed on a spot upon the white wall above my head, and I could neither turn them ner draw down the lid. In vain I strove to move—I was perfectly stiff and torpid, and without the power of motion. There seemed to be some appalling disconnection between the will and the muscular system—between the mind and the body, as if my living soul was chained Mezentius-like to a doud body. There was no pain—only a fearful sensation, as if the was no pain—only a fearful sensation, as if the whole air had congealed into a firm, transparent amber, which held me strictly imprisoned.

Suddenly, like the swift track of a falling star the thought shot across my mind that I was dead.
That could be the only solution of this dreadful enigma—I was sure that I was dead, but O God! was this death?—Had we been always mis taken, and did the soul remain thus to haunt th body, without the ability to cast it off! Was death only a suspension of power over this fibrous mass, and these finely organized senses, and nicely adjusted muscles? Only the breaking of one link in the subtle chain, that connected all the faculties and powers with their instruments? Perhaps the soul was never freed until the body had routed off inhabitthis living house, and feel it slough away from me and perish, ere I could emerge into the light and beauty of a renewed life. This I had never dreamed of, and all the joy and loxary of existence, all the sense of light and sunshine and fresh air, all the thousand-fold delights with which God has strewn this pictured world, were not worth such a price. Upon these lips the worm should feed, and I could not drive him away: these eyes, through which the woul had looked apon a mild glorious world, as through clear glasses, would change until they were loathsome and corrupted. Oh God! the agony of such a thought. Nothing I had ever imagined equaled it in terror! And when I recalled the dead faces of those whom I had loved and buried, and repoicing spirit as it fled heavenward, and which seemed to betoken the recognition by the soul of a diviner sense, as it was leaving its clay tenement—and thought that, perchance, even at the very moment white I was bending over them to take a last farewell look, with this feeling in my heart, they were enduring the same herce, burning turnents—the same bellings of horror and despair that now grawed me light and series are drops of perspiration now upon his forether are drop thought that I was dead. I inwardly declared that I would move—I strove with almost superhuman exertions, but in vain; —I could not take my eyes from that spot on the wall, which had become ac-cursed because I must see it. Sidewise through my eyes I felt the pleasant sunshine glowing into the room; and over my head the busy thes hum-med and buzzed incessantly, and crept now and then across my face.

then across my face.

How long and tedious saemed the mements; they were years to my excited mind—and no one came. An age of torment seemed to have passed when I heard a light tap at my door—I could not answer it. Again I heard a louder knock: I knew it was my sister, for she spoke and called me by name. The door epened and she came forward cantiously, and again spoke as she approached the bed. She looked a moment at me and touched me—I did not speak, but lay metionless with my eyes strained at that informal specing scream, run to the door and eniled for my mether. Instantly the horror of the cry brought the family to my bedside. They lifted my land, and it fell again upon the coverild. They felt of my heart—there was not a flutter of a pulse, for all that it seemed to me as if hell itself could not be worse than the torment that I was enduring. I neard quick convolsive sobs, and felt a soft hand smooth my hair from my forehead. Some one said—"He must have died in a fit; and yet how alm his face is." "Yes," was the answer, "he caim his face is." "Yes," was the answer, "he probably suffered no pain and died almost immediately—perhaps in his sleep." Then the voices grew more distant and murmaring, and some one left the room. Soon the door opened, and the lace of the family physician intercepted the dammed pot for a moment. Now, thought I he will know that I am not dead, sod will relieve me from this attention. He felt of my heart and poles for a moment, and then I heard him say, in answer to the anxious inquiries—"Yes, madam, I am sorry to say he is entirely gore. My art can avail him outhing," The voices then became lower, and I listened in vain.

Is was a long, dark pause—then the shutters were closed, and persons trod lightly across the door, and spoke to each other in an under tone, as if the place were sucred. That silent awe which pervades the chamber of death, and hushes the soice as if the senseless clay could hear, had passed over their spirits like breath-stain upon class. I heard the low, confused murmar of voices from through the darkened chamber. Now and ben the door epened, and some one bent over me and gazed at me, while scalding tears fell upon my acc. Then the room was emptied of all persons, and I was left alone in the darkeness and stillness. I listened for voices, for any thing was better than this decay stillness—but in vain; a spell was on the house; its sounds of laughter, its rapid footsteps, its bustle and noise were gone; every step was careful and slow, and every voice a whisper. So went on hour after hour and I still lay helpless, and longing for the moment when I should be able to move and loosen myself from the close, deathly grasp which almost pressed the life out of the body. As I lay thus, I sudistened in vain. from the close, deathly grasp which almost pressed the life out of the body. As I lay thus, I sud-denly beard a bird's gush of song from the tree be-neath my window; how joyonsly it warbied, uncon-scious of the agent so near it—and how my heart in a subject of the second of the ickened within t . as I heard it.

Soon persons came and wrapped me up in white inen, and swathed my limbs and made the horri-de funeral arrangements. Some one said, "How chastly his eyes look," and then gently pressed down the lids over the balls of my eyes. Never spot, on which my gaze had been riveted for so many hours, could become dear to me. The thought that we are slewing any object, however mean, for the last time, always raises it in impor-tance, and gives it a factitious charm; and now this spot to me was the straw to a drowning man, the silver line of sunlight in a prisoner's dangeon—the last link with this visible earth. I strove in vain to keep open the lids—slowly they yielded to the pressure of the fingers, and gradually the cange of vision became more and more confined, until all was utterly out. Never before had the lear of being buried alive suggested itself, but now it came over me like a gulphing wave. I thought that I should be laid down alive in the charnelhouse among decaying corpses, and stifled from the clear breath of heaven famish, if indeed I were not dead then. All the frightful stories of such occurrences that I had ever read came to my and, and the hope of ultimate recovery grew feebler and feebler.

The night came, and how dreary and unending t seemed. One after another I heard the hours struck by the clock, until at last, from pure ex-haustion. I lost my sensation. It must have been late morning when I returned to consciousness. I felt hands upon me—they were lifting me into my willin! I heard them screw in screw after screw until the lid was fastened, and only the narrow space over the face remained open. I felt the sides of the coffin jur and rub against my arms. and I despaired that I should ever recover my

The coffin was lifted and placed upon a table. Some one asked when I was to be buried?—
"This afternoon," was the answer,—"he has been now dead two days." I had then been unconscious for the length of a whole day. Now the time, instead of dragging a weary length, seemed to fly with lightning-like rapidity. The at seemed endlessly long—the future was fore-sertened to a breath, a moment. The clock cked faster and faster, and time seemed to pour self away in rapid moments, as a rising thunder-load empties its fierce, heavy drops more and

It was afternoon—the company gathered—the datter created beside me, and the window was seemed. I felt the warm breath of the spring air steal over my face like a delicious odor. I heard the birds singing among the branches, and the centle rustling of the swaying trees, as the wind stirred among the leaves. I thought of all the cladsome earth—of the blue sky—of the rippling tooks, half snalight, half shadow—of the early evening clouds, whose buse shift like the colors on the dove's neck—of the stars, of the moon, of the swelling and heaving ocean, and clung to the memory of them with a mute despair, loving them the more the nearer I came to losing them. nore rapidly.
